

A Sustainable Nonprofit Capacity Building Investment

The most valuable resource an individual can give to a cause they care about is their time. If an individual volunteers and their time is not spent well, then they are less likely to volunteer again or give to that cause.

- 58% of the nonprofit workforce is made up of volunteers
- 4 out of 5 charitable organizations report that their mission is dependent upon volunteers
- 1 out of 3 volunteers will not return next year
- 92% of nonprofits report not having enough pro bono resources

Most capacity building funding targets operational needs - like technology improvements - that a nonprofit will struggle to sustain. Service Enterprise is a change-management approach that equips nonprofits to fully leverage the power of people. Service Enterprises incorporate the resources of their community's people power into every aspect of their business.

Certified Service Enterprises increase the return on volunteer investment to meet their missions and build a community of stakeholders that can provide sustained investment of time, talent and resources. Service Enterprises have access to more resources and direct resources where they're needed most; determining where best to use their financial resources and where best to use the valuable skills and time of their community members. If you want to improve every aspect of a nonprofit's capacity, invest in them becoming a certified Service Enterprise.

Service Enterprises experience a 23 percent increase in volunteers annually, representing $63,000 in valued labor.

92%

of Service Enterprises said their organization was better equipped to engage volunteers to meet their mission of Service Enterprises report an increase in both volunteers and skills-based volunteers

80%

Organizations typically spend 12-18 months in this professionally-supported change management process, participating in training and coaching while they adjust processes and procedures within their organization. Service Enterprise Certification is valid for three years, signalling to external stakeholders that these nonprofit organizations are significantly more adaptable, sustainable and resourced than their peers.

Research by Deloitte LLP, TCC Group, Points of Light, Algorhythm and the RGK Center for Philanthropy shows that the following are characteristics of a Service Enterprise:

“Through the Service Enterprise certification process, Change for Kids learned the art and science of volunteerism. We now have the practices, systems, and staff in place to effectively meet the demand of hundreds of volunteers who wish to serve thousands of public elementary school students in our city.”

Katrina S. Huffman, Executive Director, Change for Kids

“When I think of the Service Enterprise Initiative I think of two words: investment and focus... Service Enterprise asked the right questions and we have experienced significant impact in moving our organization forward.”

Matthew Grundy, CEO of Habitat for Humanity in Fresno

Service Enterprise is an opportunity to support nonprofits with similar social missions, helping to expand the capacity, growth and impact of multiple organizations focused on a single issue or area of interest.
